Mushrooms and speed at Alexander McQueen

Jessica Testa
The New York Times

Alexander McQueen returned to New York, for one night only, with several large piles of pungent dirt and wood chips.

The debris, dumped into a Brooklyn warehouse and then sculpted into tall hills, became the backdrop for the label's fall 2022 show, which was titled "Mycelium," after the threaded fungal networks from which mushrooms grow.

Obviously there were mushrooms in the collection, just as one was printed in chartreuse on a poster sent to guests with their invitations. Mushrooms appeared in vibrant colors on tattered oversize knits, growing freaky tendrils via single strands of flowing mohair. They were also on asymmetric sleeveless dresses, piling on top of one another in a psychedelic mélange of crystals, beads and sequins.

But these colors (acid green, candied yellow, Cheetos orange) were more natural than their hues suggested, inspired by photos of fungi, said Sarah Burton, the creative director.

Backstage after the show, Burton spoke of the duality of the mushroom: "It's healing," she said, but it can be toxic as well. "There's a danger to it."

Fleming returns to Met in new opera based on 'The Hours'

NEW YORK – It's been nearly five years since Renee Fleming sang her last Metropolitan Opera performance of Richard Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier," a work that culminates in a sublime trio for women's voices.

Now Fleming is planning her return to the Met in a new opera that also has three major roles for women, with plenty of opportunities for harmonizing.

She'll star as Clarissa Vaughn in an adaptation by composer Kevin Puts and librettist Greg Pierce of "The Hours," a Pulitzer Prize-winning novel by Michael Cunningham and then a movie starring Meryl Streep as Clarissa.

"I haven't been singing 'Rosenkavalier' in a long time, and the idea of a trio with three women wasn't lost on me," Fleming, 63, said of the new venture.

Fleming and Puts had first worked together when he wrote a song cycle for her based on letters by Georgia O'Keeffe, which premiered in 2016. As they discussed the idea for "The Hours," Fleming agreed to see if Peter Gelb, the Met's general manager, might be

SOLLIS HEALTH ARRIVES IN PALM BEACH

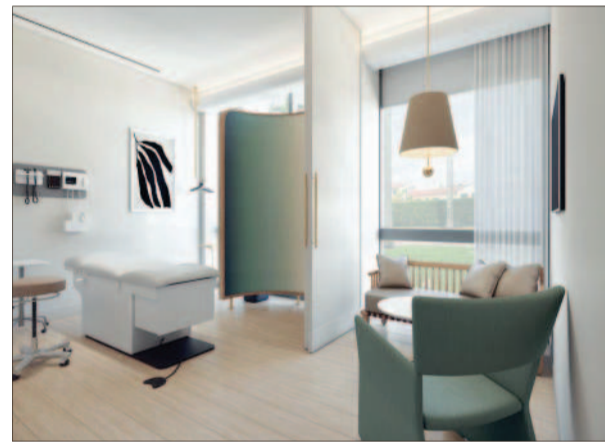

One-of-a-kind, 24/7 members-only service to open flagship Palm Beach location.

Sollis Health, a 24/7 doctor's office, private ER, and concierge service will soon open a state-of-the-art flagship location at 324 Royal Palm Way in Palm Beach. The 4,000-square-foot space, staffed with ER-trained physicians, is an elevated and calming alternative to hospital emergency rooms and public urgent care facilities, and can treat everything from common illnesses like sore throats and ear infections to 90% of what a typical ER can handle, including sports injuries and slips and falls with its on-site radiology equipment.

Like the flagship Sollis centers already operating in New York City and Los Angeles, the Palm Beach location will be equipped with comprehensive on-site labs and advanced diagnostic imaging capabilities including MRI, CT, ultrasound and X-ray. In addition to their flagship centers on the Upper East Side and in Beverly Hills, Sollis also has medical clinics in the Hamptons, Tribeca, Santa Monica and Miami.

"There is no other business model that comes close to Sollis Health's way of practicing medicine," said Dr. Ian Russinoff, Florida medical director for Sollis Health. "With diagnostics and care all under one roof, our comprehensive services ensure a streamlined experience. Sollis Health doesn't have the same limitations as hospitals, emergency departments or urgent care. We are extensively trained in acute and critical care, and we advocate for our members, stabilize our patients and continuously look to go above and beyond in exceeding expectations while instilling confidence that we are providing the best medical care."

Dr. Russinoff will oversee the medical care for Sollis Health's members in Palm Beach as well as in Miami. Most recently he was the vice chairman of the emergency department at Cleveland Clinic Florida. Prior to that role, he was the assistant medical director at Broward Health Medical Center. Dr. Russinoff is also currently the medical director for Camp Lokanda, a sleepaway camp in upstate New York.

"With a Sollis Health membership, the Palm Beach community can have peace of mind that Sollis is always there for them for any medical need, at any time of day or night — from immediate acute treatment, to a full diagnostic workup, to scheduling follow-up appointments with specialists," said Carling Pinckney, South Florida membership director for Sollis Health. "With our members-only approach, our physicians can spend as much time with our patients as we need – which is something that has unfortunately become nearly impossible to provide in the traditional healthcare system.”

Earlier this month, Sollis Health launched its Discussion Series in Palm Beach at The Colony, hosted by Sarah Wetenhall, Stacey Leuliette and Carey O’Donnell. The Sollis Discussion Series brings experts across the medical field together to offer space and thoughtful dialogue for issues that impact daily life. The inaugural Palm Beach panel discussed navigating family health across generations and what integrative health looks like in 2022 and featured a panel discussion moderated by retired anchor-correspondent for CNN, Felicia Taylor Gottsegen and led by distinguished South Florida health experts including Dr. Russinoff, functional medicine doctor Dr. Elliot Dinetz and Meryl Brandwein, founder of the Brandwein Institute for Nutrition & Wellness. Until the flagship opening, members have access to the Sollis Health pop-up clinic at 350 Royal Palm Way. Open daily from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. the clinic offers basic to advanced urgent care – from broken bones and stitches to IV medication therapy and more. It can provide vaccinations and point-of-care testing. This location also offers premium house-call services in Palm Beach County.

Individual pricing for Sollis Health memberships start at $3,000 per year. Membership includes unlimited access to all Sollis Health medical centers, consultations with expert physicians 24/7 and around-the-clock telemedicine. It expedites appointments and referrals within the Sollis network of specialists and offers special amenities such as house calls, travel medicine, VIP treatment at leading hospitals, patient advocacy and care navigation.
